

I am writing to express my concerns regarding a National Telephone Privacy law. The current Indiana State law has been extremely effective at preventing unwanted calls. From receiving several "junk mail" calls every day, I now receive less than one a week. Prior to signing up for the "no-calls" list I would often avoid answering the phone simply because I didn't want to be hassled by a high-pressure salesman, which meant I would sometimes miss talking to my family friends. I am extremely grateful to the state legislature for the action they have taken, and therefore would certainly oppose any attempt to impose a less effective national law in its place. Thank you for your attention.
